

When The Great Light Was Removed

The White Crown symbolised the pharaoh's control over Upper Egypt, and was worn on occasions involving Upper Egypt only

The Red Crown symbolised the pharaoh's control over Lower Egypt, and was worn on occasions involving Lower Egypt only

The Double Crown was a combination of the Red Crown of Lower Egypt and the White Crown of Upper Egypt. It symbolised the joining of the two lands, and the pharaoh's control over the two lands

Download from Dreamstime.com

This watermarked comp image is for previewing purposes only.

40143896

Maryna Kriuchenko | Dreamstime.com

“Then, there was peace throughout the land, and the two priesthoods dwelt together in tolerance; but, behold, the day came when the hearts of men turned again to strife. Then, the land was rent in twain, and the forces of the Red Reed Crown strove against those of the White Lily Crown. Once, again the dark mists of ignorance descended to envelop the hearts of men. Again, the sacred shrines of Truth were closed, and those who served Truth withdrew behind the veil and were hidden from the eyes of those who would profane her. The whole land was torn apart, from upstream to downstream; from the right hand to the left of Egypt, there was strife.

“Then came one who was mighty among men, one who also knew Truth and saw the wickedness of the people. He was a Declared One, for unless a man be such, he has no value among the chosen. He carried the sword among the striving peoples, and in his day, the might of Mantethrop prevailed. The spirit of Hori, who took the land from Namah, and of Minis, who united it, were with him. Then, the lands of the North and the lands of the South were delivered in to the hands of the king, and they became one. They were united, though they remained two. They were even as they had been before. Yet, the multitude declared themselves for the ways of the multitude, and the light of Truth remained obscured behind the dust raised by their dancing feet. Though peace and plenty reigned throughout the land, righteousness did not attend the throne of later kings. They ruled as kings, but the days of their rule were dark days of sorrow for the followers of Truth. For they became few and feeble in deed. They were lost in the land. Again, as in other days, the High Servant of the Sacred Mysteries, who held the key, commanded that the sacred shrines be closed. This was so that any knowledge of the Great Secrets should not pass into the possession of the unworthy multitude, which would profane them. Again, as has happened many times, the Great Light was removed from the midst of men.”

-The Kolbrin Bible(MAN:34:2-3)

Peace Throughout the Land

The land being referred to is ancient Egypt. We don't know what time this is about, but there were undoubtedly times of peace as well as times that were not so peaceful there. Historians tell us that in ancient times, Northern Egypt, called Upper Egypt, was essentially a separate country from Southern Egypt. The quote refers to the armies of these two areas as the forces of the Red Reed Crown and those of the White Lily Crown. The photo illustrating the post explains that the white crown represented Upper Egypt while the red crown represented Lower Egypt. When the two were united, the Pharaoh wore both crowns, one inside the other. I have to wonder who designed these crowns, since it is clear that the design makes it easy to unite the two into a single crown.

Sacred Shrines Closed

I don't think this means "shrines" in the sense that we use the word today. I think it is about the great spiritual schools of that time that are generally referred to as Mystery Schools. The quote says this happened because the "dark mists of ignorance descended to envelop the hearts of men." This doesn't mean ignorance of material things, but ignorance of spiritual matters. While the author of the quote says these Mystery Schools closed, it is possible that some actually remained open in secret and hidden places.

One Who Was Mighty

One came who united the two parts of Egypt again. The names used in the quote are unknown, but historians say the one who united Egypt was Menes, who was also called Narmer. The quote indicates that he was a spiritual leader as well as a material one, and that was necessary in order for unification and Truth to return to the land.

The Multitude Remained Materialistic

While the new king may have been enlightened to some degree, the vast majority of the people remained ignorant of the spiritual and embraced materialism, much as we see in the world today. The Light of Truth did remain obscured from those ancient people, but today, that is not the case. While we are certainly in a time of very materialistic people, we are also in the age known as The End Times. Because of that, the Sun of Righteousness promised by ancient prophets has come to give us one last chance to awaken. Only a small number have done so, but the number grows every year, and we can hope that before long it will reach the critical number needed to complete the process of converting the material realm back into spirit.

When the Balance Between Material and Spiritual tilts

“Such was Pharaoh, a god below gods, a man above men. He was bound by the decrees of olden times and must ever set Truth over falsehood. He was the narrow channel between God and man, one whose task was to reveal God to men. The family of Pharaoh was, in the first place, chosen by the Council of Light. In those days, a few families were selected and some chosen from them to be carefully bred, so that all the less desirable traits were excluded. Their aim and objective was to produce men and women perfect in goodness, the ultimate in perfection. These were the qualities, in which they were trained to the highest degree: In duty and responsibility, obligation towards the people, in dignity, justice and benevolence. They were a family, a race apart, trained wholly to govern in goodness. Every moment of their lives was to be devoted and dedicated to the elevation of mankind. They were taught to regard the people as their own children, to be guarded, guided and inspired by the finest examples possible. The family of Pharaoh was to reach out to the very summit of aspiration, to aim for the pinnacle of goodness and spirituality. While the common people labored under them, the whole life of royal families was to be devoted to service and goodness, to the elevation of mankind, to the preservation and administration of justice.

“Originally, this worked perfectly, but earthly conditions are finely balanced between the call of the divine and the demons of the flesh. Somewhere, down through the ages, the dam of spirituality sprang a leak, and that which had hitherto been hoarded and guarded ebbed away. The divinity, the spirituality in the blood was diluted, it became weakened, and when goodness diminished its opposite crept in. What has this glorious institution, the great Pharaoh become today? He is no more than the clacking tongue of a bell, a hollow, empty shell, a vane in the wind.”

-The Kolbrin Bible (MAN:33:25-26)

A God Below Gods

We have probably all been taught that the ancient Egyptians considered the pharaohs to be gods, but this quote from the Kolbrin Bible says differently. Rather than actually being gods, it says that the pharaohs were between gods and ordinary men. They were more than men, but less than gods. They were required to be truthful in all things as they were the channel between Man and God.

Council of Light

This is the first I have heard of a Council of Light existing in ancient Egypt, but it makes perfect sense that one existed in a society that placed spiritual values above the material. This council was probably made up of the most advanced priests, and other holy people. As we in Cosolargy know, God is all about Light, so it makes sense that such a group would be called the Council of Light. As the quote says, this council chose families from which the Pharaoh would be chosen. That may not have been the best way to do it since, as we know today, one "chosen" person might come from a family while no one else in that family is worthy of such an honor.

Earthly Conditions Finely Balanced

It is true that conditions here are finely balanced between good and bad, between material and spiritual. At least, that is how it is supposed to be. If a species of animal grows out of control in an area, nature will try to bring balance back by introducing a disease that primarily affects that animal, or some other way to reduce the overpopulation. But when it comes to the balance between material and spiritual, that balance is a lot harder to maintain, simply because the material world is the realm of the dark beings as it was created by the Demiurge, the false god. So I don't think it was a matter of the spiritual side developing a leak, as the quote says, but rather that over time, the forces and beings of darkness manage to turn more and more people toward materialism and away from the spiritual. Nature can't do much about that, but God can and is. As promised by ancient prophets, the Sun of Righteousness now shines down upon us. That means that God has placed his presence into the Spiritual

Sun. God is also gradually changing the physical realm back into spirit. It has to be done slowly to allow for humans to develop their spiritual Self and change with it. But God won't wait forever for us to turn around and move back towards the spiritual, so we should all start changing now by using the spiritual development techniques taught in Cosolargy.

Bearers of Light and the Child of Truth

“In the Book of the Bearers of Light is written: ‘Osireh says to those about him, ‘I am the first among light-bearers. I am the one instructed by The Great God, I am the one with knowledge concerning the building of the first Shrine of Mysteries. I, alone of those now upon Earth, hold the key to the Sacred Mysteries. I know the secret of things that are past, of things that are and of things that are to be. The act of birth enwraps the soul of man in a mantle of unconsciousness; it imprisons the spirit in a state of slumber. His own true self is within him, but it is as one dead within a tomb. All the great spiritual powers lie latent, locked inside, even though the mortal abode be formed to perfection. The True Way is the road to freedom; it is the process of awakening the spirit and the key to spiritual self-awareness. It unlocks the door and reveals the light. It banishes all doubts and grants an assurance of life everlasting. It is man discovering himself. Such is the True Way.'

"God says to Osireh, 'Behold the land before you, it is a chosen land for safeguarding the Sacred Mysteries. Out of its womb shall come the Child of Truth. which shall die and rise again to lead men in the struggle to glory. In the Day of his rising, the Earth will be distressed and know it not. Nor will it open its arms to the Child, which will go unrecognised and even be despised and mocked. Yet, in that day will be produced a salve to heal the scars of mankind. In that day, when men shall have forgotten the way of righteousness and turned from Truth. the light will come unto them.' These words were spoken by God."

-The Kolbrin Bible (MAN:33:17-18)

First Light Bearer

We have no references to Osireh outside of the Kolbrin Bible, but since he is referenced as a light-bearer, we can assume he was one who, like Jesus and Buddha, had awakened his spiritual Self, and developed it to the point where he could be considered a Christ. The Kolbrin Bible says he was the first such person, but they may only mean that he was the first in Egypt. There may have been earlier Christs in older civilizations.

Shrine of Mysteries

We all know there were Mystery Schools in ancient times in Egypt, Greece, and other places. Much of what these Mystery Schools taught was lost after those schools shut down, but much of it was saved and passed on through secret schools located all over the world. Today, Cosolargy is the school that is teaching these ancient truths, but modernized in some ways to account for changes in society as well as changes in humans themselves.

Secrets of Past, Present, and Future

A fully awakened spiritual person can see into the past, as well as into the future. Those of us who were fortunate enough to have attended some lectures by Gene Savoy, Sr. live sometimes notices that when he was talking about events in the distant past, he sometimes spoke as if he was actually there and witnessing these events as they happened. He also knew what was happening in the present, and what significance it would have of the spiritual growth of humanity.

Unconscious Soul

This is also something that Gene Savoy, Sr. taught that most other spiritual schools of today do not teach. He told us that our spirit and soul were in a dormant state, similar to a coma, and needed to be awakened. That is the true meaning of a spiritual awakening. Simply becoming aware that you have a spiritual Self as well as a physical and mental self isn't a spiritual awakening, but just the first small step in the process of awakening.

Chosen Land

When God reveals this Chosen Land to Osireh, he may have been talking about Greece, where the next stage of spiritual growth would occur, but he may have been showing him a vision of a land much further away, and far into the future. If it were the latter case, then he may have been showing him America in our age. So while some might think the reference to a Child of Truth meant Jesus, it should be remembered that Jesus taught as an adult, not a child. The description of a Child of Truth better matches the coming of Jamil. He was unrecognized as the promised return of Christ by many, and the claims that he was Christ by Gene Savoy, Sr. were laughed at by many. I don't think we can say that he was despised, but he wasn't accepted for what he was. And these are certainly days when men have "forgotten the way of righteousness and turned from Truth", yet some did turn to the Light, and more will continue to do so in this critical time.

Frozen Light and the Sun Cross: Science Meets Symbolism

SCIENTISTS WERE ABLE TO FREEZE PURE LIGHT AND MAKE IT INTO A SOLID FOR THE FIRST TIME

Introduction

The phenomenon of “frozen light” – literally stopping or slowing photons – sounds like science fiction, yet modern experiments have achieved just that. Intriguingly, recent visualizations of this breakthrough (such as a golden, cross-shaped burst of light) bear a striking resemblance to the ancient Sun Cross, a symbol found in sun-worshipping cultures across the world.

This investigation explores the visual parallels between cutting-edge photonics and prehistoric symbolism, examining how a cross of light in the lab mirrors the Sun Cross motif in spiritual traditions. We compare their visual forms, delve into their symbolic meanings, and consider cultural interpretations – bridging modern science and ancient spirituality.

Frozen Light in Modern Science

Featured image: A scientific visualization of “frozen light,” showing a golden, cross-shaped burst of light in a laboratory setting (a recent experiment achieved a supersolid state of light, essentially freezing photons in place hindustantimes.com). The light forms a radiant cross or star-like shape, with bright beams extending along perpendicular axes. In physics, “frozen light” refers to the ability to stop or slow down a beam of light dramatically, effectively holding it in place. This was first demonstrated in 1999 when Lene Hau and her team slowed a light beam to 38 mph using an ultra-cold atom cloud, and by 2001 they even brought light to a complete halt and restarted it.

More recently, in 2025, Italian researchers “froze” light in a new way: by creating a supersolid form of light. In this state, photons behave like a solid crystal while still flowing without friction, combining properties of solid and liquid states. As one report describes, scientists “successfully ‘frozen’ light, demonstrating that it can behave as a supersolid,” a milestone in quantum physics. Visually, how does one imagine stopped light? In lab experiments, the trapped light might be confined in special materials or Bose-Einstein condensates, often invisible to the naked eye. To communicate the concept, scientists and artists use striking imagery: for example, the golden starburst symbolically represents light held in suspension. The image shows a brilliant central glow with cross-shaped rays emanating outward, almost like a small sun captured in a lattice. This cross-like pattern is not accidental – it conveys the idea of light’s wave spreading in orthogonal directions, and it evokes the symmetry of the underlying physics (the light’s standing wave or interference pattern can form orthogonal nodes). Thus, the scientific visualization of frozen light ends up looking like a radiant cross of energy – a shape deeply familiar in spiritual iconography.

From a symbolic standpoint, the achievement of frozen light blurs the line between energy and matter. It is as if modern science has managed to “capture a piece of the sun” in a controlled setting. Photons, normally racing at 300,000 km/s, can be parked momentarily – an almost metaphysical feat that challenges our notions of the immutable speed of light. Some commentators note that this ability to hold light still “marks a significant milestone” in understanding nature.

Metaphorically, one could say that by freezing light, we hold time or illumination in our hands – themes that resonate with the timeless quest for knowledge (light has long symbolized enlightenment). It’s fascinating then that the chosen visual representation is a cross of light – almost suggesting a union of scientific and spiritual imagery. To the scientific mind, the cross-shape simply illustrates two perpendicular light waves or the crystallographic axes of a photonic lattice. But to the cultural eye, a shining cross of light immediately brings to mind ancient symbols of the sun and stars, hinting that perhaps our intuition for symbol-making runs deeper than we think.

The Ancient Sun Cross Symbol

Figure 2: A traditional Sun Cross symbol (a simple equilateral cross within a circle).

This solar emblem dates back to the Neolithic and Bronze Age, appearing in prehistoric rock art and artifacts. The four arms point to the cardinal directions or the solstice/equinox points, and the encompassing circle represents the sun or the cycle of the year. Long before modern science, ancient peoples “captured” the sun in a different way: through symbols. One of the oldest and most widespread is the Sun Cross (also known as the solar cross or wheel cross), which consists of an equilateral cross inside a circle. Visually, it’s a very straightforward design – a plus-shaped cross (⊕) imposed on a circle – yet it carried profound meaning. This emblem appears in cultures across Europe, Asia, and even the Americas, often in the context of sun cults or sky worship. In European prehistory (Neolithic to Bronze Age), the sun cross was carved into rock surfaces and molded into jewelry or ritual objects, signifying solar deities and cosmic order. For instance, in Bronze Age Scandinavia, the sun cross frequently appears in petroglyphs: a famous example is the rock carving at Madsebakke (Bornholm, Denmark), which shows a large circle with a cross and surrounding dots (cup marks) believed to represent offerings or stars. This carving – essentially a sun wheel – is interpreted as a solar symbol representing the movement of the sun or the cycle of seasons. In other words, the four arms of the cross could indicate the two solstices and two equinoxes, while the circle is the annual orbit of the sun through the sky (the year). Many other sites in Sweden and Norway reveal similar wheel cross-carvings, underscoring how universal this image was in Nordic sun worship.

Beyond Europe, variations of the sun cross appear in numerous traditions. In ancient Egypt, a very similar shape (☉ with a cross) was used not for the sun god directly (the usual sun symbol was a disk with rays or the scarab), but interestingly as the hieroglyph for a “village” or “town”. Some speculate this could represent a fortified settlement (crossroads within a circular wall), yet it’s intriguing that the sign for a human community is the same as the universal symbol for the sun – perhaps reflecting the idea of the sun as the center of the community’s life. In pre-Christian Europe, the sun cross persisted into Iron Age and Roman times as a sacred sign. It’s found on Celtic and Germanic artifacts, sometimes called Odin’s Cross in Norse contexts. In Norse mythology, the sun (Sol) was envisioned as riding a chariot across the sky (the famous Trundholm Sun Chariot artifact features a sun disc that may have a cross-like pattern). Indeed, 19th-century scholars noted that the Sun Cross can be seen as the wheel of the sun’s chariot. In many languages, the sun was poetically described as a wheel. This carries over to the Celtic Cross of early medieval Ireland and Britain: many of those ornate stone crosses have a circle around the intersection, a design likely inspired by the older pagan sun-wheel motif. It’s said that Saint Patrick and other missionaries adopted the sun circle into the Christian cross to help convert sun worshippers – effectively merging the symbols of the Sun and the Son. Whether apocryphal or not, the Celtic cross certainly looks like a Christianized sun cross, symbolizing Christ’s cross united with the circle of eternity or the sun (the sustainer of life).

In early Christian and Byzantine art, the halo or nimbus behind holy figures is a circular light that sometimes bears a cross within – essentially a sun cross halo. A prime example is the Coptic Cross used by Egyptian Christians, which often has four equal arms and is sometimes enclosed by a circle or expanded with loops, reminiscent of the sun cross (the Coptic tradition being an Egyptian continuation of early Christian symbolism). Thus, even in explicitly Christian contexts, the visual of a cross radiating within a circle persisted, linking the divine light of the heavens with the Cross of Christ.

The Sun Cross's meaning in ancient cultures almost always ties to solar concepts: life, light, and the passage of time. The sun was the giver of life and warmth; its yearly cycle determined seasons and harvests. By inscribing a cross (possibly representing the four seasons or cardinal directions) into a circle (the solar disk or yearly cycle), ancient people created a cosmic diagram of the world. Many scholars interpret the sun cross as a cosmogram – a depiction of the universe with the sun at the center. It also became associated with wheel imagery (hence “sun wheel”), signifying the turning of time. Notably, the same circled cross symbol was later used by astronomers as the sign for planet Earth (♁), perhaps because Earth from a cosmic view is the “world” defined by the four directions and the encompassing circle of the horizon. In alchemical and occult symbolism, the sun cross (as the Earth symbol) can represent the fusion of spirit (circle) and matter (cross). Unfortunately, in recent history, variants of the sun cross were misappropriated by Nazi and extremist groups– but these distortions are a far cry from the symbol's original sacred context as a benign emblem of the sun and life.

Visual Parallels Between Frozen Light and the Sun Cross

At first glance, it might seem coincidental that a lab photo of “frozen” light forms a cross, and that an ancient sun symbol is also a cross. But the visual parallel is compelling: a brilliant cross of radiance in both instances. The scientific image shows what looks like a luminous cross or star, with a bright core and four elongated rays. This immediately calls to mind a shining sunburst or the Star of Bethlehem iconography – essentially a cross-shaped star. Likewise, the Sun Cross is often drawn with rays or flames around it in artistic depictions, emphasizing that it represents a star (the Sun) shining in all directions. Many Bronze Age rock carvings of sun crosses actually include additional radial spokes or surround the cross with dots of light (as in Madsebakke), suggesting a glowing appearance. So, in a sense, both the modern image and the ancient symbol portray light radiating in a balanced, cross-like pattern. Why a cross shape specifically? In the case of the frozen light experiment, the cross form can be related to the physics: the light may have been arranged in standing wave patterns along two perpendicular axes, creating an interference pattern with four lobes. When photons in a cavity form a supersolid, they might organize into a grid – the simplest grid is two-dimensional, with vertical and horizontal symmetry. The result, when made visible, could look like a cross or lattice of light. Another down-to-earth reason is that cameras capturing a very bright point source often produce lens flares in a cross shape (due to the aperture blades), so an intense burst will naturally appear as a star/cross. In other words, when you “freeze” a bright light, you get a cross – literally as an optical artifact. In the case of the Sun Cross symbol, the cross within the circle also has a practical geometric origin: it’s an easy way to divide a circle into four equal parts (a very common act in ancient astronomy for marking solstices, directions, etc.). But humans could have chosen any number of divisions – the fact that fourfold symmetry became dominant (instead of, say, a three- or five-rayed sun) suggests that the cross shape had special significance, likely tied to the observable cycles of nature (four seasons, four cardinal directions). Four is the structural skeleton of the solar year and the terrestrial space, so the cross naturally imposed itself on the circle of the sun. Visually, both images convey a sense of balance and symmetry. The frozen light's cross is symmetric across vertical and horizontal axes; the Sun Cross is, by definition, perfectly symmetric as well. This symmetry denotes stability – an interesting common theme. The lab-created frozen light is a stable, stationary configuration of light (very unlike normal light which is always moving). The Sun Cross in spiritual art often symbolizes the stable order of the cosmos (the regulated path of the sun through the four seasons, the orderly structure of creation under the sun). Both the modern cross of light and the ancient sun cross give an impression of stillness in the midst of motion: frozen light is dynamic photons held static; the sun cross is the spinning sun “wheel” halted into a fixed emblem. This paradox – motion turned into still form – is exactly what the sun cross did for ancient people (turning the moving sun into a fixed sign) and what scientists have done with light (trapping a moving light wave into a fixed pattern). In a way, the human desire to freeze the motion of the heavens connects the Bronze Age shaman and the quantum physicist. The shaman carved a sun wheel to symbolically capture the sun's power; the physicist freezes a beam of light to physically capture the sun's essence (photons). Both ended up with a cross geometry as the solution.

Symbolic and Cultural Connections

Beyond the visuals, the symbolism surrounding frozen light and the Sun Cross also resonate with each other. Light, especially sunlight, has always been a powerful symbol of divine energy, knowledge, and life. In spiritual traditions, “God is light” and in science, light is the primal energy (the speed limit of the universe, the stuff of which matter can be made via $E=mc^2$). The act of freezing light – holding a ray of sun still – almost sounds like a mythic story of stealing fire from the gods or capturing sunlight in a bottle. Culturally, one could compare it to rituals in sun cults where priests “held” the sun (for example, at solstice ceremonies, attempting to symbolically pause the sun’s course). Today’s scientists don’t claim any mystical intent, of course, but the achievement has inspired almost poetic descriptions in the media. Articles described how this could “revolutionize future applications in quantum computing and optical technologies”, but also implicitly marvel at how we have tamed one of nature’s constants. The cross shape of the frozen light image can symbolically imply the intersection of two realms: light as a wave and light as a solid, or crossing the boundary between the intangible and tangible. In many cultures, the crossroads is where worlds meet— interestingly, here, the cross of light is where energy and matter meet, where wave and particle meet.

In ancient symbolism, the Sun Cross likewise stands at the intersection of the spiritual and the material. The circle often represents the heavens, the sun, or the wholeness of spirit, while the cross (the fourfold division) represents the material world (four elements, four directions, four seasons). Their combination in one glyph can mean the unity of heaven and earth – the sun embodied in the world. In esoteric Christian mysticism, this idea appears in the concept of the Solar Logos. The Solar Logos is essentially the cosmic Christ spirit, often associated with the spiritual sun. As one Gnostic text puts it, “Christ is the Solar Logos,” an eternal divine force, the Word or light of God manifested. This is a profound fusion of the symbol of the Sun (source of light) with the Cross of Christ. In Christian art, this is why Christ is sometimes depicted with a cross in or behind the sun, or with a radiant cross of light at the Transfiguration. The images provided (e.g. a graphic with the phrase “Christ is the Solar Logos & the Hidden Sun”) highlight this fusion: Christ seen as a hidden spiritual sun whose symbol is a cross of light. Early Christians, especially in the Celtic and Coptic regions, could thus reinterpret the pagan sun cross as a representation of Christ – the Light of the world – with the circle as his halo and the cross as his sacrifice. The Hidden Sun concept implies a spiritual sun behind the physical sun, much like frozen light might be seen as hidden light – light that's present but not moving or shining normally. It's fascinating that in both domains, we encounter the idea of capturing the essence of light: the scientist does so in a chamber, and the mystic does so in a symbol or in the person of Christ. Another cultural parallel is the notion of control over light. In science, gaining control over light (slowing, storing, and structuring it) is a leap forward for technology – enabling quantum computing, advanced communications, etc. In ancient ritual, gaining control over the sun (even symbolically) was a sign of divine favor or magical power. Kings and priests claimed authority by aligning themselves with the sun's cycles – for instance, monuments like Stonehenge or Egyptian temples were solar calendars that “controlled” when the sun would rise at specific points. The Sun Cross symbol, worn as an amulet or painted on shields, could be seen as a talisman of solar power – to have it is to carry the sun's strength and protection. In Norse sagas, the sun-wheel might be invoked for victory or protection (similar to how the cross is used as a protective sign). Fast-forward to today: while scientists aren't invoking Ra or Odin, they are effectively harnessing light in unprecedented ways. The secular pursuit of knowledge has ironically led to outcomes that echo ancient mystical ambitions – bottling sunlight, attaining a form of immortality for light (since stopping light could be seen as suspending time for it). Finally, the cross shape as a unifying motif reminds us of the deep human affinity for certain fundamental patterns. The cross within a circle is ancient and worldwide – it appears in Native American petroglyphs, Asian steppe art, European megaliths, African ornaments. It's possible that its recurrence is due to how our eyes and minds perceive the sun: when we squint at the bright sun, we often see streaks of light in a cross shape (an effect of our eye's diffraction or lens flare). Thus, the sun itself might suggest a cross form to our vision, inspiring the earliest artists to carve what they literally saw. Similarly, when scientists today simulate or photograph extreme light phenomena, the image naturally takes on a star-crossed form. In both cases, the cross of light emerges at the limit of our perception of brightness. This commonality hints that the symbol isn't arbitrary; it's rooted in optical reality.

Conclusion

The comparison of frozen light with the Sun Cross reveals a beautiful continuity between our ancient symbolic imagination and modern scientific visualization. What ancient priests represented with a carved cross-in-circle to signify the Sun's glory and stillness, modern scientists inadvertently mirrored with a cross-shaped "snapshot" of light made still. Both speak to a fundamental human fascination: to capture light – whether for worship or for knowledge. The golden cross burst of the lab and the carved sun cross of the temple differ in context by millennia, yet they converge in form and meaning. Each is a cross manifesting light: one literally light turned into a solid pattern, the other light turned into a sacred sign. This convergence of imagery suggests that science and spirituality, despite their different languages, often rhyme in unexpected ways. The Sun Cross symbol that once aligned mankind with the heavens finds an echo in the cutting-edge experiments that pin down light itself. In both, we see an interplay of illumination and form, energy and order – a reminder that certain symbols are truly timeless, illuminating our path from the primitive sunrise of civilization to the bright dawn of scientific discovery.

Sources

Harvard Gazette – "Researchers now able to stop, restart light"

(Harvard physicist Lene Hau's experiments slowing and stopping light)

news.harvard.edu

Hindustan Times – “Scientists manage to freeze light, convert it into a solid” (supersolid light experiment, 2025)
hindustantimes.com

Wikipedia – “Sun cross”
(description of the sun cross symbol and prehistoric examples)
en.wikipedia.org

CelticWebMerchant Blog – “Pagan Symbolism: The Sun Cross” (on the antiquity and worldwide presence of the symbol) celticwebmerchant.com

Glorian (Gnostic teachings) – “The Baptism of Jesus – Major Mysteries” (esoteric interpretation of Christ as Solar Logos, i.e., divine Sun)
glorian.org

Before Creation, Only God Existed

“Before creation commenced there was the One Father/Mother Being and from this Divinity came the heavenly Twins. From these were born three, and the three became many.

“The Originating Divinity is called many names among men, and in Egypt His names are hidden in other names. Among the Chosen Ones, He is called The Craftsman Creator, but men and women name Him differently among the people. Likewise, some say ‘Him’ while others say ‘Her;’ it is all alike, for these are no more than the words and distinctions of mortal man. Heaven is the sphere of God, the true abode of His Spirit in essence. There is the Heaven above, which is the High Heaven, and the Heaven below, which is the reflection of the High Heaven. The true Center of God is in Newit.

“The Craftsman of Creation placed Heaven and Earth apart. He set the sun and Stars in motion and spread wide the Earth beneath them. His wisdom, He enclosed within the hearts of men, wherein it still lies sleeping. ...

“Out of the Land of God, to the East, came Osireh, who was one filled with the Spirit of God, the first Vice-regent of God on Earth. Truly a god who walked among men, a true Son of God. He learned, by communicating with the heart of God, what lesser beings can hope to learn only by long contemplation of the Sacred Writings. Yet he said, "Not all can hope to see; it is not a thing granted to men. But even he who only hears and has faith in his heart, who stretches himself out to do good, who conforms with the teachings, who is one with us, he also shall attain to the glory of an awakened spirit. He, too, shall share the joyful heritage of a righteous man. I who have journeyed the full distance to the Fount of Fire, lit a torch there and turned back to meet you with the comforting light of its flame. Hence, there is no need for you to journey the full length of the long, weary road to see Truth."

-The Kolbrin Bible (MAN:33:7-9, 12)

The One Father/Mother

It is conventional to refer to God as Male, but most spiritual people are aware that God is just as much female as male. God cannot create something he knows nothing about, so as the creator of both male and female beings, God must be both. If you have been in Cosolargy for some time, and you attend the Divine Sunrise Services, or listen to the recording of them, you might notice in the wording of one of the prayers at the end of the service, the Minister reading the prayer refers to God as "My Father, my Mother, my Bride, my Groom." etc. This shows that, like the ancient Egyptian priest who wrote this part of the Kolbrin Bible, we recognize that God is all, not just male.

Heaven is the Sphere of God

Heaven is the place where God is found. I think most of us understand that. It is referred to as a sphere because the nine dimensions of reality are generally thought of as being nested like a nesting doll or like the layers of an onion. Each dimension is within the next higher one. While the actual shape of the dimensions is unknown, it is convenient to picture them as spheres.

The quote says there are two heavens, the Heaven above and the heaven below. Most consider Heaven to be the eighth dimension, with the Godhead being the ninth. The heaven below probably means the fifth dimension, where many Spiritual Beings dwell.

The center of God is "Newit" which can mean spirit or new life. I think both meanings apply to God.

First Vice-regent

The quote says the first vice-regent of God on Earth was someone called Osireh. We don't know who this was, but it obviously refers to a person who reached the level of spiritual awareness to be considered a Christ. In other words, one who had fully awakened his Christ Consciousness. The importance of this statement is that it tells us there has been more than one person who became a Christ on Earth. Jesus was one, and so was Buddha, but there were others. Jamil was one as well. And now we have the Presence of God shining down on us in the Sun of Righteousness, meaning that God Himself has become Christ in this final age.

Egypt Loses its Spiritual Greatness

“O great city, O heart of Egypt, your habitations are overthrown and your sacred shrines lie buried beneath the sands of time. The dust of ages enwraps you, as a dead one is swathed within the tomb. Your temples still stand and ring with noise, but the solemn shrines are silent. They have become an abode for the wild dog and scorpion, and your roads are highways of wickedness.

“Behold, in the days long gone down into dust, the whirlwind came and earth poured out her wrathful breath, so that you were burnt. The evildoers were swept away by the waters, and the wicked ones were swallowed up in the fires. The days of the years were shortened and the times of all things altered. The seasons were turned around, so that the seed rotted within the soil, and no green shoots came forth to greet the day. All buds withered upon the vines, the land lay dead under its grey shroud. The moon changed the order of her ways, and the sun set himself a new course, so that men knew not where they were and all were afflicted. The stars swam in a new direction, and the whole order of things was changed. Yet, O Egypt, even from those days of calamity you emerged unbroken, your spirit intact, your heart unshaken. What has happened to you, O land of mine?

“Weep, O land of Egypt, weep for the things that have gone. Weep for the spirit now-departed. Weep for the betrayed gods, weep for The Great God so high above them that you scarcely knew him. Weep for the destruction that has befallen you. Weep for all the beauty and glory that have gone down into the dust. Weep for eternal ages, and sleep for evermore. Your spirit has departed, your life had ebbed away, your vitality has burnt itself out, only the empty corpse remains. The generations yet to tread the Earth will know nothing of you. They will see no more than the dead, dried, mummified thing. The loving life that once vitalized it so gloriously, they cannot know. O Son of Kebew, forgive the people of this land for their ways. Reveal your greatness by serving those who no longer walk in the light of your instruction, even as you served their fathers in days gone by.”

-The Kolbrin Bible (Man:33:1-3)

Sacred Shrines Buried

This quote from the Kolbrin Bible indicates that Egypt was already losing its status as a world leader of spiritual development, even at the time this was written many centuries ago. If you have studied ancient spiritual schools at all, you know that ancient Egypt was a leader in spiritual sciences. Unfortunately, materialism took over, as it did in so many other places. As a result of this loss, crime became common, which is why it says the roads became “highways of wickedness.”

Days Long Gone

It isn't difficult to understand this part of the quote. The whirlwind and the wrathful breath of the earth probably refer to volcanoes and tornadoes. While there are no active volcanoes in Egypt today, it is believed that there were some in ancient times.

There may also have been earthquakes causing tsunamis, which explains the part about evil ones being swept away by water. But we may be talking about a greater catastrophe than any of this. It may be that either the poles of the Earth reversed, causing the planet to flip over, or the poles of the sun reversed. Either of those things could have caused great catastrophes on earth. Another theory is that a large asteroid may have passed very close to Earth, causing the catastrophes. Whatever happened, the point being made is that the ancient temples of spiritual development were destroyed or damaged to the point where they stopped being used, resulting in a descent into materialism. A recent news article says there is evidence of a major cataclysm in the Nile Delta of Egypt in ancient times.

The Great God

The quote continues by saying the people of Egypt should weep for the betrayed gods and the Great God they hardly knew. Of course, the students, adepts, and masters in the great spiritual schools knew of the Great God, the one and only True God, but only the most advanced students were able to reach the very high level of consciousness that permitted them to communicate directly with God and his Angels., so only they could claim to truly know God.

A Real Physician

“The physician must know the courses of the Watchers. He must know their times and their comings and goings. He must know the secret of the Lord of Forms and the way of the Guide of Souls. He must know who are the Owners of Forms and who are the Formless Ones.

“He must know their abode. He must know the road and the four ways of entry. He must know the nature of the double power. He must be a master at drawing forth the spirit. He must know the outside of man, the things which flow over it. He must know the inside man, the substances which fill it. He must know the heart, the muscles that move out from it, controlling every action of the body.

“These are words to fill the ears of the physician. These things are written on his heart. The physician sits on a throne of silence. The physician absorbs the pains of the sick through his ears. If any man opens the door of his heart to the physician, the tongue has no knowledge of what the ears have heard. The inmost room is open to the silent man. The heart of the physician is not puffed up because of his knowledge. He talks with the simple man as though he were wise. The words of the physician are as healing herbs. The physician bears himself so that when the eyes of the sick fall upon him, they are half cured. The eyes of the physician see through the flesh, When he sat before his master, he learned to bear patiently the chastisements for his own failings, now, he can justly reprove another for his. The tongue of the physician is dipped in honey, not in guile. Where Truth adds to suffering without benefit, then he may veil it, but never will he do so without purpose or care.”

-The Kolbrin Bible (Man:32:2-4)

The Watchers

In some ancient lands, spiritual beings such as angels were called Watchers because they watched over us. They also helped people turn to God and develop their spiritual selves as well as helping to protect them from evil forces and beings within certain limits because the realm of matter is the realm of the fallen angels.

Lord of Forms

The Lord of Forms is God, but the law of physical forms is the Demiurge, the false god. The Guide of Souls is the true God, although spiritual teachers and Gurus are also guides to the Soul. So what this part of the quote is saying is that in order for a physician to do his job properly, he must be aware of both good and evil beings, positive and negative influences. That seems obvious to most of us, but many practicing medicine today have no knowledge of the spiritual and treat only physical ailments as if the body has no connection to the spirit. A proper physician knows that sometimes taking care of spiritual needs can also help heal the physical body.

Throne of Silence

This tells us that even in ancient times, it was considered improper for a doctor to talk about his patients and their illnesses. Of course, a doctor could say she has healed someone of this disease or another without naming the patients.

Absorbs the Pain of the Sick

Physicians generally don't do this, although some have enough empathy to feel some of what the patient feels. It is true, however, that many spiritual healers heal by first taking the illness from the patient into themselves, then using their own healing powers to heal themselves. Gene Savoy, Sr. was known to use that method when he was young and strong.

The Physicians Words

The good physician doesn't berate the patient for being overweight or for going for a hike in a wilderness area and coming in contact with poisonous plants. A real physician heals without being judgmental. By the same token, the good physician uses the treatment he thinks will work best, even if others may consider it outdated. He also has to consider the beliefs of the patient. If the patient doesn't believe herbs or other natural treatments work, then the doctor may have to treat that person with drugs. On the other hand, the patient who doesn't trust modern drugs should be treated with natural treatments when possible.

Origins of Light and Darkness

“There is no boundary for light. It was unknown when it began. Nothing was when light was not. Nothing was when radiance was not. Nothing was when life was not. There was never a boundary for light. Nothing was when water was not.

“Water is prior to darkness. Prior to darkness is water. Nothing is without an end. No number is before the uthras were. Light beings are prior to darkness. Prior to darkness are uthras and older than their inhabitants. Goodness is prior to the malice of the place of darkness. Gentleness is prior to the bitterness of the place of darkness. Living fire is prior to the consuming fires of the place of darkness. Praise is prior to the practice of sorcery and witchcraft. Hymns and books are prior to the sorcery of Hewath, the terrible woman.

“Darkness can’t be measured by light. The house of gloom isn’t lighted. The house of gloom isn’t lighted, and turbid waters have no sparkle. Darkness grew and creatures formed. Darkness formed, and when it formed it tested its force. It harbored malice in its mind. It imprisoned its own kanna, the place of the soul. It imprisoned its own kanna, and everything it did was nothing. The children of darkness are nothing, but the children of life stay. The house of evil is nothing, and its consuming fires die. Its sorcery dies and ends, since it has no place in eternity. It comes to nothing. The generations of life stay forever. The living instruction rises and illuminates a perishable living place.”

-The Ginza

No Boundary for Light

We know that there are boundaries for some types of physical light, so it should be obvious that what the Ginza is talking about is Spiritual Light. The traditional Bible has God creating Light before anything else, but that still gives people the idea that there was a time when the Light didn’t exist. That idea is false simply because everything that is purely spiritual exists outside of the limits of time and space, so it has no beginning and no end, no boundaries of any kind. And as the quote says, nothing existed before Light.

Nothing Before Life

The statement that nothing existed before Life means spiritual life. Spiritual Life, like Spiritual Light, exists outside of the limitations of space and time. But this means more than that. It tells us that Life is everywhere and everything is alive. Perhaps not in the physical sense, yet all things are alive on the spiritual level. Native Americans understood this and said all things have a spirit, even rocks, mountains, and rivers. Since a spirit is always alive, that means those things are alive as well.

Water Before Darkness

Since Darkness refers to the fallen realm of matter, this also cannot refer to physical water. It means the Word of God, which “flows” from the Godhead like water to enlighten those who attune themselves to it.

Nothing is Without an End

This one can be confusing because of the sudden shift. All of the previous lines of the quote talk about spiritual things. In this case, it means physical things. All physical things come to an end. Some will argue that they don't come to an end; they just change form, but for the form that was, an end has happened.

No Number Before the Uthras

An odd way to word it, but what this is saying is that there were no beings existing before the high-level Spiritual Beings that are here called Uthras, but we would call them Angels or beings of Light. Since the physical realm was an offshoot of the spiritual realm, physical beings, which is what I think was meant by “no number,” could not have existed before spiritual beings.

Goodness Prior to Darkness

Since Spirit came before matter, goodness existed before Darkness. This doesn't mean the kind of darkness you get when you turn out the lights in a room. The Darkness means the realm of the fallen angels, also called the Demiurge. Since that realm of matter was "created" by changing Spirit into something else, Spirit had to exist first, and true Goodness is found only in Spirit.

House of Gloom

This is obviously a reference to the lower dimension generally called Hell. There is no Spiritual Light in that lower dimension, so if one wishes to turn away from Hell and head toward Heaven, it must be done while still living physically in the third dimension where it is still possible to access the Spiritual Light from God, especially now that we have the Sun of Righteousness shining down on us.

Eighth and Ninth Dimensions

“My father, yesterday you promised me you would take my mind to the eighth heavenly sphere and after that you would take me to the ninth. You said this is the sequence of the tradition.’

‘Yes, my child, this is the sequence, but the promise was made about human nature. I said to you when I first made the promise, ‘If you remember each of the stages.’ After I received the spirit through the power, I established the action for you. Clearly understanding dwells within you. In me it is as if the power were pregnant, for when I conceived from the spring that flows to me, I gave birth.’

“Father, you have spoken every word rightly to me, but I am amazed at what you say. You said, ‘The power in me.’” He said, ‘I gave birth to it as children are born.’

“Then, father, I have many siblings if I am to be counted among the generations.’

“Right, child. This good thing is counted . . . always. So, child, you must know your siblings and honor them rightly, since they have come from the very same father. For each of the generations have I addressed. I have named them, since they are offspring like these children.’ ‘Then, father, do they have a day?’

“‘Child, they are spiritual, for they exist as forces that nurture other souls. That is why I say they are immortal.’

“ ‘Your word is true. From now on it cannot be refuted. Father, begin the discourse on the eighth and the ninth, and count me also with my siblings.’

“‘Let us pray, child, to the father of the universe, with your siblings, who are my children, that the father may grant the spirit of eloquence.’”

-The Discourse on the Eighth and Ninth

The Eighth Heavenly Sphere

What the quote calls “the eighth heavenly sphere” is better referred to today as the eighth dimension. The dimension we live in as physical beings is the third. The second dimension is the one commonly called Hell or Hades. They are dimensions, not physical places. The speaker in the dialogue asks God to take his mind to the eighth and ninth dimensions. It must be understood that many people in the time this was written considered the soul to be part of the mind. Some still do, but they are wrong. The spirit and soul are independent of the physical brain and the mind associated with it.

Each of the Stages

The Father, God, tells the speaker to remember each of the stages he must go through if he is to reach the lofty heights of the eighth and ninth dimensions. The list of stages is not provided and never is. Certain facts about spiritual development were never put into writing in the past. Today, we know that the True Path is through awakening and developing the Spirit through the reception of the Light of the Spiritual Sun. So, God is telling him that enlightenment is not something simply granted on request. It must be worked for and developed gradually.

I Have Many Siblings

In a spiritual sense, all Souls are siblings as they are all Children of God, so that is why the person in the dialog has many siblings. That is why spiritual Masters such as Jesus and Buddha have always taught that we should treat each other as brothers and sisters, regardless of race, religion, nationality, or sexual identity. Those superficial physical attributes are irrelevant on the spiritual level. Sadly, we are today seeing many practicing the exact opposite of what the great Spiritual Master taught, yet many of them still claiming to be Christians, Buddhists, or Jews.

They are Immortal

Spirits are immortal. They don't age, get sick and die, suffer from illnesses, etc. Yet many people show little concern for the Spirit and Soul. Fortunately, now that we are in the time of the Sun of Righteousness, that is changing. More and more people are awakening to the fact that they have a spirit as well as a body and mind, and the spirit is at least as important as the body. The numbers may be relatively small at this time, but they are growing. It has been prophesied that it will take only the development of twelve spiritual masters on Earth in order for the world to be changed back to the spiritual form that God always intended it to be.

Rise to the Challenge of a

Time of Affliction

C

“Men of no estate and landless men become the lords of men, and strangers become masters of slaves and servants. They stir up strife among the people and say, “This is because we are protected by gods of power; by what are you protected?” The people know not that the power of gods is sustained by the spiritual devotion of the people, and their power flows from the strength and goodness of their worshipers. When a people fail their god, that god fails the people.

“I am a man instructed and know this is a time of strengthening affliction, but my heart troubles me. Will the people understand this? Will they rise to meet the challenge or go down the path of ease, the fair path of flowers and fragrance? Is this the Land of Leaders, wherein will be erected the Temple of Truth and the Stairway to Heaven? Would that I could peer through the door of the unborn days!

“Strange bowmen have entered the redlands, and they spoil the people. They are men whose delight is in suffering. They are men whose pleasure is destruction; they tear down but do not build. The roads are covered, and the water channels opened. The craftsman no longer interests himself in his craft, for that which he makes is taken away. He who reaps does not store the corn, while he who is without a plow never lacks a full storehouse. The harvests go unrecorded, and he who toils not eats with he who has labored at the ingathering. The man without cattle eats meat, while the man who owns them eats herbs. The waters rise and fall away from the land, but none plows or sows, for men say, “The events of tomorrow are unknown, and who knows what man will reap where we have ploughed and sown?”

“The scribe is stricken and dies on his stool. His writings become a mystery and are disdainfully trodden underfoot. The fruit of many days’ labor become kindling, the wisdom and knowledge of generations become fuel for fires of destruction.”

-The Kolbrin Bible (Man:30:15-18)

Men of No Estate

What the quote says has little meaning today. There are many of us who are not landowners or owners of homes. But what this really means is that people who are not invested in society are still becoming leaders of those societies. A person who has never had to work a day in his life shouldn't be running a corporation with thousands of employees. A person who has no background in politics shouldn't be elected to a high office. More importantly, churches and spiritual schools are being led by materialistic people who have little spiritual knowledge.

Protected by the Gods of Power

Despots, dictators, false preachers, and Gurus are protected by the “gods of power”. What they don’t seem to realize is that the god of power, might, war, greed, etc., is not the true God but the false god, the Demiurge. In other words, these greedy despots are Satanists, even if they don’t know it. And we have seen in this age that when people turn away from God, God no longer helps them. God will help anyone who wants to develop their spiritual Self, but God doesn’t help the materialist who prays only for a new home, a new car, etc. Those are the gifts of Satan, not God.

Will People Rise to Meet the Challenge?

We are seeing people rising up against rampant materialism and greed and seeking a spiritual awakening and spiritual life. The numbers may be small, but growing all the time. Even the despots feel the Sun of Righteousness pulling them towards the spiritual, but they are so materialistic. They don’t know why. They know they are not satisfied with what they have, so instead of turning to something else, they keep grabbing up more and more physical wealth. In the end, though, God will win, and the world will change for the better.

Strange Bowmen in the Redlands

This is saying that foreigners are entering countries and taking over, turning people away from their traditions. In many cases, these foreigners are materialistic or atheists and turn the people away from God and spiritual matters. Such people often claim things that are not theirs as they have not worked to earn them. In the United States, we have corporate leaders earning three hundred or four hundred times what the average worker gets. Meanwhile, politicians line their pockets with money often gained illegally, or at least immorally.

The Future

Despite all these horrors, the authors of the Kolbrin Bible (Egyptian priests) saw happening, they were eventually overcome. We are now living in another age of rampant materialism, probably the worse ever, but this one will end with the dawning of a New Golden Age of Light and Wisdom. As the old saying goes, "It's always darkest before the dawn." And for this new age to happen, the dark ones must be brought out of their hiding places and exposed to the light of day so they can be converted or eliminated. But the way we defeat evil is not by behaving like them. We do it by sending thoughts of peace, joy, and love into the world and practicing them in our lives.